Marking a Milestone, Looking Ahead . . .

Friends,

This year we marked 60 years of service to the poor overseas—an achievement well worth celebrating. But this milestone also calls us to reflect, to look back on what we've learned and to continue toward our vision of a world transformed through solidarity.

In her chronicle of the early history of CRS, Catholic Relief Services: The Beginning Years, Eileen Egan—a close friend of Mother Teresa and one of the agency's first lay staff members—traces our true beginning back much further than 1943 and war-torn Europe. She dates our roots back to the apostle Paul. His request, through Titus, that the Corinthians assist the poor and hungry in Jerusalem produced the first international relief collection:

“Giving freely to relieve the wants of people unrelated by blood or tribal ties, people separated by seas and mountains, people of differing customs and language, was a new and scandalous concept. It was based on something unheard of in human history, universal brotherhood. This concept, dissolving all ties of blood, tribe, race, or citizenship, came direct from Jesus, the universal brother.”

Our legacy is indeed one that proceeds from this 'scandalous concept'—that of concern beyond borders.

Much has changed in 60 years: we are no longer War Relief Services, and our focus has shifted from western Europe to eastern Europe, Africa, Asia, Latin America and the Middle East. We have seen countries freed from colonial rule and witnessed the struggles and suffering as the Cold War found new staging grounds. And we have seen the destruction that HIV/AIDS has wrought around the world, particularly in sub-Saharan Africa.

Each day in 94 countries and territories around the world, the men and women of CRS—people of all races and faiths—give witness to our mission of helping the poorest of the poor.

In Ethiopia we helped prevent a famine that threatened millions. But food and water alone won't solve the problem. And so we are laying the foundations of the future through work in areas like education and agriculture. Our goal is to ensure that this generation of Ethiopian children will be the last to know famine.

In Afghanistan and Iraq, we are helping people brutalized by repression and war to realize their dignity. But rebuilding a society requires more than simply bricks and mortar. Underpinning all our relief and development work is a commitment to building communities of peace and justice. Material assistance can only go so far to alleviate poverty and suffering; we must also address the root causes to truly make a difference.

In the United States, we have expanded our outreach to Catholics, educating them about issues of international social justice and peace, and providing concrete opportunities to make a difference in the lives of the poor around the world. Through our partners and programs, we are building bridges of solidarity. Linking the people we serve with those we represent is an important step in building a world where basic rights and human dignity are enjoyed by all.

Our Catholic identity and our guiding principles, grounded in Catholic social teaching, call us to this work. We live in a world of need, but we are an agency of hope, and we can all be agents of change.

For 60 years, Catholic Relief Services has touched the lives of the poor and made a world of difference for millions. Your prayers and support have made this possible. On behalf of our staff around the world, I thank you.

Food for Today, Hope for Tomorrow

In 2003, Ethiopia faced a food crisis even larger and more widespread than the one that captured the world's attention almost 20 years ago. Drought and the resultant failure of crops created an emergency on a scale unseen in modern times. More than 13 million Ethiopians—half of them under age 15—were dependant on food aid for survival.

The reach of the HIV/AIDS pandemic only exacerbated the situation, leaving more than a million orphans and lowering the country's average life expectancy to 46 years. Among the net effects of the pandemic has been the undermining of traditional coping systems:

More than 13 million Ethiopians—half of them under age 15—rely on food aid to survive.

With family members absent or too sick to work, many more people are susceptible to hunger and disease than in previous generations.

Preventing Famine

We responded by providing more than 500,000 metric tons of commodities—food, flour, corn-soy blend, lentils, cooking oil and grain—to millions in need. But fighting famine requires more than just delivery of food. We led a coalition of international agencies that carried out assessments across Ethiopia. In the worst affected areas, we set up therapeutic feeding centers to reach the most vulnerable Ethiopians, often children under five. In addition to food distribution, we worked with partners to deliver much needed medicine and help rehabilitate wells and water systems.

Providing for the Future

The worst of the crisis is now over, but the needs remain. With our partners, we continue to distribute food to millions of Ethiopians. Beyond food aid, however, we are committed to long-term sustainable development that will help communities recover and be better prepared for the future.

A child in Shinile, Ethiopia cares for his family's livestock.

This can only be accomplished by addressing the underlying causes of poverty in Ethiopia. In partnership with the church and other local groups, we are working to help ordinary people develop the skills to take charge of their own development. The overwhelming majority of Ethiopians live in rural areas, making them susceptible to drought and crop failure in ways unimaginable to most. To help mitigate this vulnerability, we are investing in improved irrigation systems. By providing better tools and fertilizers, we are helping farmers become more efficient.

Local seed fairs—conducted for the first time this year in Ethiopia—are also part of this plan. By bringing together local seed sellers with farmers, we help create a vibrant local market. Using vouchers, the farmers can decide for themselves what they want to plant instead of relying simply on whatever is available in donated stock. This encourages diversification of crops and recognizes that local people are sometimes the best people to solve local problems.

Ethiopia is a drought-prone country, and we know we cannot change the weather. We can, however, help people to become more resilient and to break the cycle of poverty and hunger. Through programs that help farmers become self-sufficient, we can offer hope for a future where food aid is not needed. Likewise, with initiatives that offer education, basic healthcare and support for families affected by HIV/AIDS, we look to empower Ethiopians for generations to come. ■

We are working with local partners to bring clean water to rural villages. Here, a worker upgrades a water pump that will eventually pump 12,200 liters per hour—nearly 10 times the capacity of the old pump.

A Fight We Must Win

We support approximately 160 HIV/AIDS projects in 30 countries around the world, addressing a crisis that has become as much an issue of development as of public health in many nations. Projects total $40 million in value and reach nearly four million people affected in Africa—the epicenter of the crisis—as well as the hardest hit areas of Asia and Latin America.

Reaching Communities Around the World

Around the world, the Catholic Church is one of the key providers of essential care and support for people living with AIDS. We continue to work with local church health networks to expand HIV/AIDS programming, helping partners to provide voluntary counseling and testing, behavior change and life skills education, home-based care for those infected and support for those left behind. We also work at the village level to help raise awareness about the disease, to help reduce the stigma against HIV-positive individuals and to assist communities to respond more effectively.

In 2003, we received a $2.3 million grant to address AIDS in Nigeria, while in Madagascar we received a $1.5 million grant from the Global Fund to Fight AIDS, Tuberculosis and Malaria.

In Haiti, we support a local organization that provides small loans to families affected by AIDS. The credit program establishes community banks and teaches clients better financial management tools, while also enabling them to contribute to community savings plans. These small loans often pay school fees for children, buy medicines for the sick and support income-generating projects.

Almost a third of Zimbabwe's population is HIV-positive, and nearly a million children have been orphaned by AIDS. We support a range of activities, including the Magama Life Center, which provides a primary school for nearly 800 children—almost half of whom are orphans. Many of the most vulnerable students also come on Saturdays for a full day that includes play time, drama and dancing, school work and chores such as cleaning, gardening and washing school uniforms. As in a family, these children have roles and responsibilities, and they regain a sense of place and an identity beyond that of a parentless child.

Raising Awareness Here at Home

In the United States we work to raise awareness of the disease, in part through our Africa Campaign speakers' tour, which enables our African national staff to meet and talk to concerned Americans in their hometowns. Abbie Shawa, Program Manager for HIV/AIDS in Malawi, traveled across the United States in 2003 to talk about his country's triple disaster of HIV/AIDS, drought and floods and how it affects communities, families and individuals like him. He brought to each church, school and community center he visited a sense of what it's like to live, work and cope in the midst of such trauma and

Peace in Our Time

For too many around the world, peace remains a distant goal. There are children in many places who have never known their world without war. We are working to help change this in more than 50 countries.

We know that peace is built, not declared. Our efforts to create societies of peace and justice are carried out through many activities, including education programs, interreligious dialogue, media campaigns, advocacy and small-business assistance. These activities aim to empower local communities to help themselves.

Bridging the Divide

A river runs through the center of Mitrovica, Kosovo, dividing the city and separating the Serb and Albanian communities.

International peacekeepers—reminders of the region's recent troubles—guard the bridges in an attempt to prevent renewed violence. We have been working with youth councils in Mitrovica's high schools to empower students and their parents and teachers to get involved in addressing the conflicts in their communities. These groups are taking up issues of education quality and reform, as well as issues of peace and conflict resolution. The youth councils are expressing a voice that has long been silent for people in Kosovo, and the program has brought people from both sides of the river together. Last summer Serb and Albanian students decided to create a multi-ethnic youth council for Mitrovica, to address the needs of all citizens and to find ways to work together to build a future where soldiers aren't needed on their city's bridges.

Standing Together Against Violence

When deadly Muslim-Christian violence—associated with the Miss World Pageant in Kaduna, Nigeria—began to tear apart neighborhoods, we organized an unprecedented interfaith emergency relief project and brought together the major national Christian and Islamic associations. The project provided shelter and assistance to families whose homes had been damaged when they were targeted as minorities in their neighborhoods. This enabled the return of these families and was the first of its kind and helped bring Nigeria's different religious communities together in action and in understanding.

Building a Global Network for Peace

We support learning at home and abroad. In partnership with the University of Notre Dame's Kroc Institute for International Peace, we conduct a 10-day summer institute for peacebuilders to meet, learn and share best practices. Participants come from areas with histories of conflict, like Colombia, as well as from places struggling to heal, like Rwanda. Staff from our Baltimore headquarters, who focus on activities in the United States, as well as our domestic partners, also come to learn from their overseas counterparts.

In the Philippines, we are developing innovative ways to promote peace and reconciliation among indigenous peoples, Muslims and Christians on the southern island of Mindanao. This year peacebuilders from more than a dozen countries participated in the fourth annual Mindanao Peacebuilding Institute—a unique, three-week learning opportunity that unites peacebuilding practitioners and thinkers from across Asia to increase the effectiveness of field operations and inform emerging theories in the field. ■

When Crisis Calls

For 60 years we have been there when crisis called—from the agency's early days in post-war Europe to recent interventions after Hurricane Mitch and the war in Afghanistan. The poor suffer the most when disaster strikes, and we are called to care for those in need.

We are called to help others not because they believe, or because they might someday believe, but because we believe. Our agency vision of a world transformed by solidarity is one that asks us not simply to recall the example of the Good Samaritan, but to live it.

We have provided emergency relief for those in need since 1943. Our work in Afghanistan includes relief as well as long-term development.

Iraq

We are assisting the poorest and most vulnerable Iraqi communities. When major combat subsided, we focused on empowering Iraqis to address their own needs and shape their own future. Our citizen-driven Iraq Community Action Program enables Iraqis to actively advance the development of their communities, putting an Iraqi face on humanitarian efforts serving the Iraqi people.

As part of this program, we are working—through our local partner Caritas Iraq and in partnership with Save the Children—in 25 communities in southern Iraq to help rebuild homes and lives. Local communities are determining their priority needs and recommending reconstruction projects in program areas such as water, sanitation and agricultural irrigation systems; school and road rehabilitation; the establishment of women's income-generation activities and training centers; and community clean-up initiatives.

We also support a nationwide supplemental feeding program for children and pregnant and lactating women. The program raises awareness in local communities about proper hygiene and good nutritional habits, helping build a more responsible, informed and active Iraqi civil society.

Liberia

When Liberia's long-running civil war peaked, rebel groups attacked the capital, overran the second city, and the president went into exile. As fighting raged, our staff in Monrovia endured the same terrors and tragedies that afflicted Liberians across the country, where bullets killed and wounded indiscriminately, homes were looted and an atmosphere of insecurity was further driven into the nation's consciousness.

While we worked with the local church to deliver emergency food, shelter, clean water and medicines, we redoubled advocacy efforts in the United States, calling for increased support to secure the country and aid its reconstruction. In July, our long-time partner Archbishop Michael Francis—the archbishop of Monrovia and an internationally renowned defender of human rights—visited the United States and met members of Congress, the Bush Administration and the United Nations. He also addressed the national media with a message of peace and reconciliation.

Despite improvements, significant portions of the country remain insecure and inaccessible to aid agencies. Hundreds of thousands remain homeless and in need of assistance. We remain committed to working toward peace, justice and reconciliation in Liberia. This commitment is expressed in short-term relief programs—like the one providing material assistance to more than 50,000 people in Monrovia, Buchanan and the city of Harbel—and longer term projects in agriculture, infrastructure improvement and the training of local peacebuilding organizations.

A man from the Diocese of Trenton, New Jersey, had an epiphany during a visit to a partner diocese in Uganda last year. “They don’t need many of the things we think they do,” he said of the people he encountered. “We think they only need money and houses; they really need support and love.”

Promoting such charity, beyond the depth of a pocket, undergirds all our programs for Catholics in the United States. Each program, whether a diocese-to-diocese partnership or an initiative to support foreign aid legislation on Capitol Hill, is an invitation to raise our voices on behalf of millions muted by poverty, war, oppression or mere circumstance. Rooted in Catholic social teaching, it is our heritage and responsibility.

Last year we worked with Catholics in the United States and abroad to be voices in support of U.S. and international policies that provide resources that allow us to reach more of the world’s poor and disenfranchised—and policies that take on the root causes of war, poverty and injustice. We stepped up opportunities to engage Catholics at home, helping them to understand how their choices as consumers, investors, voters and advocates resonate beyond our borders.

Civic Engagement

There has been a steady increase in diocesan and parish involvement in our international public policy advocacy efforts. Our legislative network grew five-fold during 2003, totaling about 1,200 diocesan and parish contacts. Working alongside the U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops, we successfully rallied the Catholic community behind policies to increase aid to rebuild war-torn countries like Afghanistan and Iraq as well as funding for critical programs that deliver food and medicines to the needy worldwide.

Empowering Catholics at Home

We are not only improving the lives of millions of the poor and vulnerable around the globe, but we are equally committed to changing hearts and minds here in the United States. The agency

continued to empower Catholics to serve as a voice for the poor and put their faith into action through programs such as Operation Rice Bowl, Food Fast, overseas immersion experiences and partnerships between dioceses here and abroad. The underlying goal of the programs is to combine education and action so that Catholics in the United States are actively engaged in creating a more just, sustainable and peaceful world for all of God’s people.

Oil and Africa’s Poor

In a decade, Africa will supply nearly a quarter of the oil consumed in the United States, generating more than $200 billion in revenues. Such wealth could enable African governments to vastly improve the lives of the poor through investment in health, education, water, roads and other vital necessities. But history has shown that ordinary Africans will see no such improvements if governments lack accountability. Last summer, we issued a report entitled Bottom of the Barrel: Africa’s Oil Boom and the Poor, examining the issue of African oil development and offering recommendations for policy reforms. Bottom of the Barrel, which was downloaded from the CRS website more than 100,000 times and received much attention in Catholic and secular press around the world, serves as a central document to shape and direct our advocacy on the issue. ■

The Faces of CRS

We serve the poorest of the poor, on behalf of Catholics in the United States, in 94 countries and territories around the world. We come from all races and faiths, united in a belief in the dignity of every person and the vision of solidarity that tells us we can build a better world—one life, one relationship at a time. This is work that goes on every day in the lives of our beneficiaries, through the hard work of our staff and thanks to the generosity of our donors.

Report from Independent Accountants

To the Board of Directors of Catholic Relief Services —
United States Conference of Catholic Bishops

We have audited, in accordance with auditing standards generally accepted in the United States of America, the statement of financial position of Catholic Relief Services — United States Conference of Catholic Bishops (CRS) as of September 30, 2003, and the related statements of activities, functional expenses and cash flows for the year ended September 30, 2003; and in our report dated February 20, 2004, we expressed an unqualified opinion on those financial statements. In our opinion, the information set forth in the accompanying condensed financial statements is fairly stated, in all material respects, in relation to the financial statements from which it has been derived.

Donor Acknowledgement

We gratefully acknowledge the following private individuals, organizations, foundations and corporations who supported our work with $10,000 or more in fiscal year 2003.

We also extend our deepest thanks to thousands of others for their steadfast and continuous support of our work. Their concern for those less fortunate is demonstrated every year by their gifts to the Annual Bishops Overseas Appeal and to Operation Rice Bowl, and by their continuing support of all our programs. Their generosity helps make it possible for us to alleviate human suffering and provide assistance to the world's poor.

The compilers have carefully reviewed the names that are listed. Donors are recognized for gifts made during Fiscal Year 2003: October 1, 2002 - September 30, 2003. If a name has been listed incorrectly or has been omitted, please accept our apologies and bring the mistake to the attention of:
